Big Official Salaries in England.

is interesting to note that the salary of the late Lord Chief Justice Coleridge was £1,000 a year, while that of the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the United States was $10,000. The difference between the salaries of these two officials is no greater, however, than that between the salaries of the two judges of the Supreme Court of the United States.

that between other high officials in Mexico and this country. The lord chancellor receives $60,000 a year while in office and $25,000 for life of $25,000. The lord appeals get $30,000 and all the judges $25,000. The income of the British Attorney-General is at least $60,000 a year, against a salary of $5,000 for the Attorney-General of the United States. The for figure is the salary of our Secretary of State, while English secretaries of state get £10,000 a year, and after serving for a certain time they are entitled to £10,000 a year for life. Altogether it will be seen that the high salaries in England are very handsomely paid, when compared with those in this country, and the bench is about the best paid of all.

Skillful and Strategic Points Explained by Joe Quinn.

much of my success in playing second base to their valuable co-operation. When I became a member of the St. Louis Unions in 1883 I was first baseman, and, when the Unions evolved into the Maroons on their accession to the League I was succeeded at the initial bag by Al McKinnon. I then became a centerfielder and utility man. When the Maroons' franchise was sold to the Indianapolis club I was part and parcel of the goods and chattels delivered on that occasion.

Being dissatisfied with the show I received in the Houston market I returned to

When captain, I having a chance to become the Pooch-Bah of the Duluth (Minn.) Western League Club, I dropped into minor league company. That was in 1887. In 1888 I became second baseman and captain of the Des Moines Western League team, which captured the pennant. Hutchinson, now of the Chicago club, was my first baseman. At the close of that season the Boston club purchased my release for $4,800. I remained with the champions until 1893, when I became a member of the Browns, acting as first baseman. The Browns played down the captivity when George Miller was accused, and I take this opportunity of saying that I have never served under a more skillful manager.

From the brief sketch I have given it will be seen that I have had exceptional advantages in learning and practicing the points of playing second base. I must not omit to mention that I have acquired a great deal of information from the published writings of Fred Dunlap, who introduced and perfected many of the strategic plays practiced to-day. It was also fortunate in becoming acquainted with Mike Dwyer, who gave me proof of his friendship for me by his visit to my camp when I was young in the business.

The successful pitchers have a code of signals by which the team behind them is notified of the kind of ball to be pitched in each instance. This enables us to where the ball will be hit and take positions to get it. John Clarkson is one of the pitchers who relies on his support's intelligent observation of his habits. The pitcher who tries to do it all seldom succeeds. He may carry him through a season or two, but it's the long-headed, strategic twirler who keeps in the game year after year. Baseball is a position game. Observe the peculiarities of my opponents at the bat and endeavor to adapt my style of play, or rather position, to each one. If a batter is a right-fielder, I will position myself further to the right from the pitcher and play for him. If there is a runner on first, I pay no attention to him, for Elly, and have, by an exchange of signals, arranged that he will cover second in case I attempt to steal that bag. Very often the batter has been signaled by the base runner that the latter will go down to second on the next ball pitched. The batter, taking the chance that he will cover second, will throw the ball to right field in the expectation that I will not be in my position to handle the hit. We try to outwit our opponents and meet their strategy with strategy. There are some batters who are very clever, and some batters who have a knack of sending the ball over second base. We change our positions constantly in our efforts to take advantage of these peculiarities. I appreciate your interest in the subject.

while Ely is virtually backing up third base, and, then again, I am almost lined out behind Roger Connor, while Ely is cantering.

Professional base ball has developed into a game of skill and strategy. It is this combination which has won the champions! year after year for the Boston Clays.

Will I take my position as a player to anticipate every possible play, so as to be ready to promptly execute it if the ball is hit to me. One of the most difficult plays is that which arises when there is a runner on first and another at third and the former is to be sacrificed. First base men in getting both men, but it is generally dumb base running more than anything else.

With both arms reached out, imagine Duffy and McArthur at second and try to think of any combination of words a leg by each, by which that couple could be doubled up. In a case of that kind, I make it a point to be sure of the man going home. "Fair!" In the grand stand do not know how much of a fair dog there is in this and other plays. Often my back will be to the man at third when he makes the break for the plate. Still he never gets two yards' start before I have thrown the ball to head off the runner. I have seen another man has kept his eye on him, and has warned me by saying, "Give it to him, Joe." "Let her go," or some such expression.

A second baseman has to cover a great deal of ground. "Get out there!"

second-base for pop flies. He plays a deeper field than the guardian of the initial bag, and can therefore get more of that kind of hits than he. There is no easier reason for the second-base man going for a fly behind first base. He will be running sideways, while the first baseman's back will be to the ball.

Many of the sharp hits are much easier to field than the ones that aggravate grounders, which a man has to handle and throw while on the run in order to beat a fast runner to the bag. An error made on one of these tantalizing and puny chances is never forgiven. The man has to be so sure of his luck that they are fielded cleanly. They have so little force that their direction is changed

The second baseman who goes through a season without being spiked or injured is a lucky individual. It is true that the short-stop often covers the right wheel of the infield. He is liable to get hit, but he is not as liable to get hurt as the second baseman. The short-stop can put his foot on the other side of the bag and use it as a protection, but the second baseman has to follow the path of the runner and take his chances.

I stand with my weight on my right foot, which is about two feet from the line, and as I go down to touch my man, I raise my left foot and touch the line with it.

LESTER: What a runner with the ball! I can avoid it, but touch him as he passes me, so as to lessen the chances of my getting hurt. In making quick double plays, a second baseman is sometimes a quick to head-on and colliders, but I generally manage to touch the bag and by a side jump get away from the runner who is trying to block me.

It is hardly necessary to say that the second baseman must be a quick and accurate turner, a sure fly-catch and an adept in handling ground balls. JOK QUINN.

CLAIMED BY TWO HUSBANDS.

was the Woman Who Died in Chicago
Mrs. Long and Mrs. Sampson Also.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 4.—The claims of the two women, one Leon Long of this city, and the other A. M. Sampson of Tucson, Ariz., to the body of the woman who died in Chicago are possible of a solution when the circumstances under which Long's wife left this city several years ago are taken into consideration. It is the belief of Long's daughters and of his friends who knew Mrs. Long that it was she who died in Chicago, and further, it is their conviction that she traveled to Tucson and became the wife of Benker Sampson, who married her there. She was then taken back to her husband in this city, when death intervened.

Seemingly she lived happily with her husband and two daughters, but those who were very intimate with her knew that the domestic bliss was not real, and she deserted him over two years ago, taking $1,000 of his money. The one fact which makes the identity of the woman at Chicago possible is that of her name, for when Sampson was married to the woman whose body he believes is buried at Chicago, if the marriage was performed after June 2, 1917, with Mrs. Long disappeared, it is likely both men would be charged with the murder. It is not known whether Sampson was married to her, but if the marriage was performed before that date the present mystery is not fully cleared up.
